GOD KEEP OUR LAND

The Canadian National Anthem, or “O Canada” as many call it today, was originally written in Québec City by Sir Adolphe-Basile Routhier in French. The anthem was originally called “Chant National” and was first performed on June 24, 1880 for the Saint-Jean-Baptist Day celebration, which is actually Quebec’s national holiday, not Canada’s which is July 1st. The lyrics of this original version have been amended several times, however the original French lyrics have remained the same since then.

Between 1962 and 1980, more than one dozen bills proposing that “O Canada” be adopted as the official national anthem were introduced in Parliament. On 15 March 1967, the special committee, created by the Federal Government, recommended keeping the original French lyrics, but amending the existing version of Weir’s English lyrics, changing “And stand on guard, O Canada” to “From far and wide, O Canada,” and “O Canada, glorious and free” to “God keep our land, glorious and free.” By 1970, both Thompson and Weir’s descendants surrendered their rights over O Canada to the Canadian government for one dollar.

Finally, on 18 June 1980, a bill was presented by Secretary of State proposing that “O Canada” be declared Canada’s official national anthem as soon as possible. The National Anthem Act was passed unanimously by the House of Commons and the Senate on 27 June 1980, and received Royal assent the same day.

Of course, as you know, it was recently changed again, making it more inclusive. We now sing, “In all of us command.”

For many, it is not just an anthem, but a prayer. There are many in Canada who oppose any mention of God in the lyrics. For now, let it be our prayer...”God, keep our land glorious and free.”
